A REPORT ON THE EVENT

---

Faculty Research in Progress Workshop 6 March 2017

The workshop gave a platform to the faculty members, who were pursuing their Phd or were engaged in research projects or had any form of research interest, to showcase a part of their work by participating through a paper presentation in the conference. Faculty members from different departments who presented papers. It was interesting to see the range of work colleagues belonging to different departments. The workshop had around 50 participants (Faculty Members) from different departments of Bharati College. The range varied from the History Departments' presentation on the relevance of the historical monuments in Delhi (going back to the Mughal era) to the English Departments' presentation of the position of women in nineteenth-century colonial Bengal (with relevance to Bankimchandra Chattopadhyaya's essays). There were other topics too that focussed on different aspects of scholarly interests of faculty members. On the whole, the event was a very engaging and informative experience, especially, in unraveling the scholarly talents of our esteemed colleagues. The feedback of the workshop was that the participants felt quite benefitted from the event and also were looking forward to more of such events.
