objectivity, myth or reality

In celebration of World News Day, the Department of Journalism at Tarseel recently hosted a compelling panel discussion on the intriguing topic of "Media Objectivity: Myth or Reality?" The event aimed to delve into the complexities surrounding media objectivity, bringing together esteemed professionals to share their insights and perspectives. The distinguished panelists included Mr. Rohit Upadhyay, an alumnus of the Indian Institute of Mass Communication (IIMC) and a seasoned independent journalist; Mr. Ashok Srivastava, Editor and Anchor at DD News, a prominent public broadcaster; and a Tedx speaker with a diverse background adding an unconventional dimension to the panel. The discussion unfolded with a brief introduction to the significance of media objectivity in the current global landscape, touching upon various facets such as the challenges faced by independent journalists, ethical considerations in reporting, the impact of technology on objectivity, and the crucial aspect of public perception and trust in the media. The audience actively engaged in the dialogue, posing insightful questions and contributing to the depth of the conversation. The event proved to be a memorable and intellectually stimulating occasion, showcasing Tarseel's commitment to fostering critical discussions in the field of journalism.

In conclusion, the panel discussion on "Media Objectivity: Myth or Reality?" hosted by the Department of Journalism at Tarseel for World News Day provided a comprehensive and insightful exploration of the challenges and dynamics surrounding the pursuit of objectivity in journalism. The presence of esteemed panelists, each bringing a unique perspective to the table, enriched the dialogue and highlighted the multifaceted nature of media objectivity. The discussion not only addressed the challenges faced by independent and mainstream journalists but also delved into ethical considerations, the impact of technology on reporting, and the critical role of public perception and trust. The active engagement of the audience underscored the relevance and importance of the topic in today's interconnected world. As Tarseel continues to facilitate such thought-provoking discussions, it reaffirms its commitment to nurturing a new generation of media professionals equipped to navigate the complexities of the ever-evolving media landscape. This event stands as a testament to the department's dedication to fostering critical thinking, promoting transparency, and contributing to the ongoing discourse in the realm of journalism.
